

Graeme Brooker is an academic and writer based in the UK. He is the Head of School for Fashion and Interiors at Middlesex University. He has taught Interiors in many Universities in the UK most notably Cardiff, Brighton and Manchester where he was the programme leader. He has written extensively on the interior and in particular the reworking of existing spaces and buildings. He is the author of a number of books on the subject. These include 'Rereadings' (with Sally Stone: RIBA 2004), 'Form and Structure – The Organisation of Interior Space' (with Sally Stone: AVA 2007), 'Context and Environment – Site and Ideas' (with Sally Stone: AVA 2008), the Visual Dictionary of Interior Architecture (with Sally Stone: AVA 2008), Objects and Elements - Occupying Interior Space (with Sally Stone: AVA 2009), and 'What is Interior Design?' (with Sally Stone: Rotovision 2010). He is the founder and now Director of the charity I.E. (Interior Educators), the national subject association for interiors in the UK. He is a commissioning editor for the publisher Ashgate and is also a member of the editorial advisory board for the magazine 'Interiors: Design: Architecture: Culture' (BERG) and the I.D.E.A journal in Australia and New Zealand. His latest books are 'Key Interiors since 1900' published by Laurence King, and 'The Handbook of Interior architecture and design' published by Bloomsbury.