Universidad San Francisco de Quito (USFQ) is a liberal arts non-profit, private institution located in Quito, Ecuador. USFQ is the only university in the world that owns and operates an undergraduate campus in the Galapagos Islands and in the Amazon Rainforest, where world-class scientists conduct groundbreaking research and teaching.

Closely following the American model, USFQ believes in freedom as a fundamental human characteristic, and in training students to become well-rounded world citizens, leaders and entrepreneurs.

Therefore, architects and designers find the perfect place to take advantage of this open and holistic type of education. The College of Architecture and Interior Design (CADI) offers programs design-based and studio-centered to meet the competitive requirements of the real world.

The architecture and interior design programs provide students with a rigorous training that integrates creative and technical aspects of the profession in a global context with a Latin American lens. The program ethos embodies the idea that architecture shapes the city.

Points of strength

USFQ College of Architecture and Interior Design offers his students the opportunity to become critical thinkers trained with contemporary architecture tools to depict the future of cities and the built environment.
