 national ranking #1

The University of Zagreb, established in 1669, is the oldest Croatian university and the oldest university in South East Europe. The Faculty of Architecture has just celebrated its 100th anniversary and currently provides a five-year-long programme divided into two cycles open to 12' newcomers per year.

Study is held by teachers coming from departments of Architectural design, Urban planning, physical planning and landscape architecture, Architectural structures and building construction, and Theory and history of architecture. The programme implies lesser number of lectures in favour of individual learning promoting intense work in multidisciplinary design studios and workshops. Zagreb's Architectural Faculty is renowned for its leading competence in Architectural Design, Environmental Design, Planning, and Heritage Conservation and its role in serving the local communities throughout all the Country.

The social role and the importance of the School is visible in the intriguing skyline of Zagreb, where you can meet architectures coming from the Bauhaus period to the actual bioclimatic buildings. The Departments work also as professional units, maintaining a strict collaboration with the territory promoting novelties coming from original researches.

Points of strength

Zagreb, recently awarded one of the best Schools of Architecture by Domus, is for the architectural students that want to discover innovation and history in a very sophisticated background. Students will find a friendly environment in a beautiful green capital town, rich of historical places and cultural venues. University offers courses in English and services as the dormitory and organizes field-trips to discover Croatia and its beauty.
